Always Something to Celebrate

There are some weird things on the calendar this week. Some we will actually celebrate & some we will not. Here we go...

-National Peppermint Patty Day: the Quiggin's family from Northern Ireland started making these treats in 1840. Pastor Cassie says they are easy to make. Sounds yummy.

-National Pork Rind Day: is always on Super Bowl Sunday when another kind of pigskin is celebrated. There are lots of these high-protein, no carb, gluten-free, crunchy snacks consumed. They come in several flavors such as BBQ, spicy, & my favorite, Salt & Vinegar.

-National Cheddar Day is pretty much every day at our house.

-Galentine's Day No, that's not a typo, it's really a thing. Gal Pals get together and celebrate their female friendships.

-Fat Tuesday: This is the days to eat or drink all the things you'll be giving up for Lent. Sounds like a busy day. Pancake Supper is at 6 pm. Call me for a ride.

Now onto important stuff!

Stella Hendrick says this is a garlic press, but that would have to be one HUGE garlic clove since this thing will hold something the size of a walnut.

Any other guesses?
