Celebrate Stupid Questions

I thought every day was Ask a Stupid Question Day, but apparently it is so rare in some people's lives, that we have a day to "celebrate" it. If you're a parent, you know the drill & it gets worse when they go away to college. That's when the stupid questions and/or comments get delivered in text messages.

There's a guy on Instagram named Chip Leighton who has gathered some of the funniest texts he has gotten from his kids when they went to college. Here are a few of my favorites.

- How much laundry detergent do I put in the dryer?
- What's the word for the cages we slept in as babies?
- Can I refreeze ice cream that's been sitting on my dresser for 4 days?
- What's grandma's actual name?
- Do you know what floor in my dorm the ice machine is on?
- Did you know George Foreman was a boxer? I thought he was strictly a grill guy.
- Do I need to put water in the washing machine first?
- What's my shoe size?
- I hyped you up for parents weekend so I'm expecting an MVP performance out of you.
- Does the post office sell stamps?

- I'm going to run for valedictorian this year.
- How do I open the Tide pods without getting detergent all over my hands?
- Can the men's basketball team do a load of laundry at our house Friday?
- What time is noon?

Apparently my kids are brilliant.

My doctor said to get healthier.
Use a bicycle and cut carbs.

I said, "Hold my beer."

- My coffee isn't a drink. It's a tiny brown restraining order between me and society.
- I don't want coffee with "hints of berries & cacao". I need coffee that walks into my brain, flips over the table & says, "Get up! We have responsibilities."
- Raising kids is just saying, "stop yelling" while also yelling.
- They say, "listen to your body." Well, mine wants to quit my job, move to the mountains, & live off of chips & queso. So now what?
- My crayons are sharpened, my helmet's on tight. Today is gonna be a great day!

Advice from a Southern Mama

- Sometimes the best thing you can do is hush.
- Quit asking God to remove stress when you keep inviting it over for supper.
- Some lessons cost peace, money, & sanity. Learn them the first time.
- Some doors ain't locked, they're guarded.
- Some people apologize just enough to keep access to you.
- The older you get, the smaller your circle ought to become.
- Everybody smiling at you ain't happy for you.
- Everybody ain't meant to go where God's taking you, sweetie.
