

HAPPY EASTER!!

Easter is here!! Is it just me or does it feel like this has been one of the longest winters on record? I KNOW we've had more rainy, gloomy days that we normally have so maybe that's while it feels like it has lasted so long.

My yard is the first sign of spring for me. When the snow bells make their entrance, I know warm weather is not far behind. Even though I have a brown thumb, I have the most amazing yard! Even my WEEDS are screaming Easter as they are all either purple (violets) or yellow (dandelions) or white (iris & snow bells). The only rule in my yard is, if you bloom, you can stay! Luckily, a few tenants before me had green thumbs, so there are also gorgeous flowers & trees also blooming in those three colors. Since our home was built in 1854, there have been more than a few talented tenants before us, most were relatives of folks in this congregation! I like to think that, being good Lutherans, they only planted these colors, but I can't verify that. We love being the present caretakers of the property's history and hope they would be proud of the changes we have made.

April 9th is "National Cherish An Antique Day" - the day to learn the stories and histories of the pieces that have been passed down through our family.

I have very few "new" pieces in my home. Almost everything I own was passed down from one relative or another or purchased from an estate sale of someone else's relatives.

One of my favorite pieces is an old step back cupboard that was built by my great-grandfather, Bluit Montgomery, who owned a cotton farm in Moulton, Alabama. The cabinet used to sit on the back porch and always housed Mama Montgomery's jams and jellies. When they died, the cabinet was passed to my MeMa. After Beatrice and Carl put their spin on it, adding some trim and new white porcelain knobs, it was moved into their kitchen. When Beatrice passed it went to Uncle Randy and then to me.

The cabinet no longer holds jams and jelly as I haven't had time to make preserves in several years, but I did teach our oldest daughter, Elizabeth, to make them and she is quite the pro! If you are lucky enough to get some of her fig-berry or peach preserves or her apple butter, get ready for a treat, because it's fabulous!

Have a great week & call if you need anything!
